A JAUNT IN IRELAND.

With Every Variety of Scenery in the Course of the Day's Drive.

If the day be fine their can be no difficulty in Ireland of shaking off importunate thoughts, should you be neither landlord, land agent nor land grabber. You ordered the car over night at 9:30, so by 10 you ought to find it ready packed and waiting for you. Naturally, you first cast a glance at the horse—an under-sized animal, who looks as if he could go, as indeed he can, although he has no neck to speak of, and has probably been down more than once. You look at the luggage, which is all right; the portmanteau strapped behind the shafts in front, the smaller articles stowed away in the well, and the wraps arranged to form a rest for your back.

Then you look curiously at the driver, who is to be your guide and companion, and though you may pride yourself on your powers as a physiognomist, you can surmise very little about him. Time and your attempts at conversation will tell. Possibly he is stupid, silent or morose, but the odds are that he brightens when you speak, and shows himself a brilliant conversationalist. Unless it be involuntary and unconsciously, he is seldom droll, but he professes to have any amount of local information at your service. It will not do to trust him too far, for rather than appear to be at fault when he is questioned he will draw freely on a fertile imagination. But discretion and your own experience should keep you tolerably straight if you are not getting up facts with a purpose. Then "unbeknownst to himself" his talk will be enlivened by bulls, and with quaint turns of expression that are richly racy of the soil.

And talking of the soil and the scenery, though we have left the scenery chiefly to the guide books, you may have any variety of both in the course of one long day's drive: black bog and barren moorland; strips of deep though rather swampy meadow land, stretching along some peat colored stream; a col, or a gap, as they locally call it, which means a tight fit for the road in some depression between the shoulders of the lofty purple hills, and then a rapid descent into some fertile strath, where the swift, clear salmon river is hurrying onwards, breaking over the rocks and the banks of gravel, under the foliage of feathering woods that surround a home-like mansion in its home fields. Another and a stiffer pull up to another of those "gaps," and as you top the crest of the steep ascent and look out across a broad table land of swamp and pool and heather you feel the fresh sea breezes fanning your cheeks and know that you can be at no great distance from the ocean. The road keeps well clear of the coast, for the coast line breaks out and inwards, in sheltered bays and storm-lashed headlands. But it is worth while pulling up at the nearest accessible point and making a pilgrimage on foot along the rough tracks of the turf carts to have a peep over the brink of the land line. And there in North Donegal, or any one of the wild western counties, you may look down over the dizzy edge of the beetling cliffs, where the great gulls are darted to swallow size, over the waves breaking silently far beneath you, while to the right and left stretches cape beyond cape, as they have been mined and hollowed from time immemorial by the billows of the Atlantic.—Alexander Innes Shand in Blackwoods.

Senator Stanford's Parrot.

Senator Stanford has a parrot, and a remarkable one, too. It cost him several hundred dollars, and is a wonderfully educated bird. It speaks four languages—English, French, German and Italian. The strange part of it is that the parrot, as soon as he hears anyone speak, knows in what language to address the person. For a long while no one knew that the parrot spoke Italian, until one day an Italian artist came to the house to do some work, and the parrot heard him talk. At once the parrot started off to jabber Italian, and had quite a conversation with the man. It always talks German to a German servant and French to the maid. The parrot, when any one comes down in the morning, says: "Good morning, I hope you rested well." He is very particular, and one day, when a stranger went up to him and said: "Pretty Polly! Polly want a cracker?" he quite astonished the person by saying: "Oh, stop that foolishness. Can't you talk sense. I am tired of that rot." The parrot has not learned to say chestnuts yet, but very often, when asked if he wants a cracker, says: "That's old, give me something new." He longs to sing, and knows "Peck-a-boo" and chants it loudly at times to the amusement of all in hearing. The parrot has its favorites among the inmates of the Stanford residence, and will talk for hours with them.—Cor. Baltimore American.

The "Summer Widower's" Linen.

During the summer months the best customers in my line of business are men whose families are absent for the summer. The care of their linen has always been entrusted to the wife. When the stock on hand is soiled, then the summer widower drops in every day or two in a hurry, purchases a suit of under-clothing, a shirt or collar or a pair of cuffs, dashes into a bath room and changes. A few days before his wife comes home he devotes a half day to going around and gathering up his scattered linen. He generally finds the pile amazing in proportions. I recall one young man who lived at the Elks club while his wife was at the seashore, who in this way accumulated in a single summer five dozen shirts, about thirty suits of underwear, and collars and cuffs enough to start a store with.—Dealer in Globe-Democrat.
